Leadership: Shared Reflections

by Lynne Bezanson & Sareena Hopkins,
Canadian Career Development Foundation

When we were first asked by CDAA to write an article about our role as leaders in the career development field, truth be told, we really hesitated. We often think of leaders as people that other people follow - and this did not fit at all our sense of ourselves.

The Leader in You

by Paula Wischoff Yerama, CCDP
CDAA Executive Director

You are a Career Development Practitioner. Your work matters. You are looked to for guidance, advice, support, resources, information, statistics, leads, and feedback. Your knowledge, skills, and abilities have been developed through formal education and hands on experience.

Leadership is not a position, it's an attitude.

Career Practitioner Profile: Karen Lamothe

A decade ago the trend for new training was leadership development. I believe this trend continues today. Every organization was looking at developing their staff to be leaders; "From the boardroom to the shop floor", was the motto.

The Style of Servant Leadership and the Career Development Field

by Arlayna Alcock, BA, M.ED Adult and Workplace Learning Career Advisor, Career Services, Bow Valley College, Calgary, AB

One of the present challenges in career development is the continual pressure of funding constraints which can affect the range of services provided to community populations that increasingly require more work search support due to the changing nature of the workplace.
